In English II

Hello John,

Let me tell you an incredible story that I recently read in the newspaper. A group of explorers decided to embark on an adventure to go in search of an ancient lost city deep in the jungle. After days of arduous travel, they finally managed to pick up the trail that would lead them to it. However, when they were approaching their objective, they suddenly found themselves cut off from the rest of the group by a huge landslide.

Some of the explorers did not want to waste any more time and went ahead to see if they could find an alternative route. Meanwhile, others lagged behind, exhausted from the effort. When they finally managed to regroup, they had to start gathering branches and leaves to improvise a shelter, as they had run out of supplies.

Just as they thought they would have to call off the expedition, they spotted a helicopter in the distance flying over the area. They quickly lit a bonfire to attract its attention and be rescued before the impending storm caught up with them.

Once back in the city, they had to hand in a detailed report of what had happened to the relevant authorities. Fortunately, despite the difficulties, they managed to achieve their objective and did not miss out on the opportunity to discover that lost city.
